

CAMBODIA

CAMBODIA: COUNTRY MARKET INFORMATION

HISTORY / POLITICS

Cambodia's recorded history dates from the third century, A.D. The history of the early period is dominated by the civilisation surrounding Angkor Wat, the spectacular ruins of which are situated near Siem Reap in the northwest of the country. Cambodia was made a French Protectorate in 1865. Independence was declared in 1954. Politics thereafter were dominated by prince Norodom Sihanouk until his overthrow in 1970. The following 20 years have been characterised by civil war and massive destruction, which have left the country devastated. From 1970-75, civil war and intensive American bombing caused widespread destruction and disruption. In April 1975, power was seized by the extreme marxist Khmer Rouge. Under their rule, cities and towns were evacuated, and the entire country was returned to a state of primitive subsistence agriculture. Over a million people died, including most of those with higher education, from a combination of brutality, starvation, and neglect. The Khmer Rouge were ejected by a Vietnamese invasion of January 1979, which installed a client regime. The civil war followed, with resistance groups, including the khmer rouge. Operating from bases along the border with thailand. Vietnamese troops were largely withdrawn in 1989. A protected series of negotiations culminated on 23 October 1991 with the signature in paris of a comprehensive peace settlement, largely drafted by the Five Permanent Members of the United Nations Security Council.

TODAY

UN organised elections were held in May 1993. The elections were narrowly won by the Royalist Funcinpec Party which sustained 45.47% of the votes cast. The defeated Phom Penh-based Party, the Cambodian People's Party received 38.23%.

For an interim period between June & September Funcinpec and the CPP jointly held power while a constitution was produced. This arrangement was confirmed with the approval of Sihanouk and the Constitutional Monarchy in September 1993 with Sihanouk as King.

ECONOMY

Since 1989, a policy of economic liberalisation has been adopted which has helped increase agricultural output and bring some life back to trade and industry. Major exports are timber (77,000 cubic meters in 1990), rubber (31,000 tonnes in 1990), beans and corn. A number of state factories have been leased to the private sector and joint ventures have been established in enterprises such as hotels, rattan, mineral water, wood processing, a tannery, plywood, tyres, and textiles. These beginnings of private enterprises have been helped to offset the drastic reduction in aid and technical assistance from former socialist countries in recent years. In October 1991 the interim regime formally renounced socialism in favour of a free-market economy.

PRIORITY SECTORS

Cambodia's tourist potential is enormous, because of the spectacular ruins of Angkor Wat, but difficulty of access and lack of facilities have limited numbers - 9000 visitors were recorded in the first four months of 1991. Hotel and other tourist-related developments will be an early priority. A major international aid effort to rehabilitate all areas of Cambodia's infrastructure - transport, health, education, communications, water, agriculture, power supplies - will be the dominant feature of the next few years. Development of mineral resources is beginning, with the first oil exploration contract recently signed. Gemstones are being mined, but much of the production is in the hands of the khmer Rouge.

UK - CAMBODIA TRADE

Minimal. UK exports in 1993 were worth £3,113,000, while imports were £711,000.
