Preface

The Middle East in Microform was originally conceived by the Executive Committee of the Middle East Microform Project (MEMP) as a guide for selection of material for microfilming or acquisition. Without such a list, the task of selecting material for filming would have led to many hours of searching individual data bases and bibliographies. The University of Washington Libraries agreed to compile the list.

When the preliminary list was completed in 1989, the MEMP Committee approved the distribution of copies to all institutional members of the project. Subsequently, the University of Washington Libraries printed and distributed the first edition, which was entitled, The National Union Catalog of Middle Eastern Microforms. The present publication is an expanded and revised edition.

Acknowledgments are due to several people who have supported this publication, either by providing lists of holdings, encouragement, or by hard work. Among these are Edward Jajko of the Hoover Institution, for supplying its holdings on Ottoman militaria and Iranian resistance literature; Laurie Abbot, formerly of the University of Chicago Library, for sending a list of that library's extensive microform holdings; John Eilts of the Research Library Group, Inc., for supplying the RLIN holdings of Middle Eastern microforms; George Atiyeh, of the Library of Congress for supplying their catalogs of materials in microform; Soraya Clemens, of the University of Washington Libraries, for her careful review of all the Persian entries; and Brian Johnson of the University of Washington, for taking the difficult task of reviewing the Ottoman and Turkish entries. Ray Boylan, of the Council for Research Libraries, deserves thanks for agreeing to distribute this publication.

Finally, I am grateful to my cocompiler, Michele Bates, who had the courage to participate in this project without knowing either the languages involved, or the scope of the task. Credit should be given to Rachel Simon, who, as initial cocompiler, laid the ground work for the original publication. Last, but not least, I am grateful to both Betty Bengtson, Director of Libraries at the University of Washington and Linda Gould, Associate Director for Collections, for their continuous support and encouragement throughout the project.

FAWZI W. KHOURY

Introduction

This publication includes two general categories of microform materials, first, microforms dealing with the Middle East generally, and secondly, the material from the Ottoman militaria collection of microforms in the Hoover Institution. Rather than combine the two quite different categories, they are listed in separate sections. Within each section, entries are in alphabetical order.

The format for the entries is simple. The first line is the title in italics. Succeeding lines are indented. The second line is the publisher, the third is the place of publication, the fourth is the language code, the fifth is the format and location(s).

[Title]	Annals of oriental studies
[Publisher]	University of Madras
[Place of publication]	Madras
[Language code]	EN
[Holdings]	v. 1-9 (1937-64)
[Format and location(s)]	169 microfiche; 9x12I CRL Mow MiKW WaU

At the beginning of the main listings, there is a list of the National Union Catalog codes for libraries included in the list, and a list of codes for the languages.

An index of the titles arranged by language, then alphabetically within each language concludes the publication. Although it was originally intended to provide an index by country of publication, the large number of serials that were published secretly outside of the country in which their audience was located made it difficult to determine the country of origin. Classification by language seems a reasonable substitution.

The Middle East in Microform was compiled using PC-FILE version 5.0. The data was later exported to Microsoft Word for Windows version 1.1a.
