Summer Camps: What to Wear

SUMMER CAMPING CLOTHES

Here Are Things You will Need To Make it a Success

LAST year every one was so busy with war work that there was no time to think of camping, but now all our thoughts are turning to recreation. If you have chosen camping life, to get real comfort and enjoyment out of it you must be suitably dressed. Not only must your clothes be comfortable, but they must be able to stand the roughest kind of wear. One thought I have had in mind for the clothes illustrated on this page is their adaptability to various sports. Where a skirt is needed, nothing could be more practical than the shell skirt to the left. It buttons down both front and back, and bloomers and puttees could be worn underneath to enable the wearer, when the necessity demands it, to loosen the buttons and take longer strides. Where no skirt is required, bloomers with a heavy sweater and a middy blouse fill practically every need. A still more versatile costume is this at the right below, reminding us of English farmer lassies with their belted smocks. The putnees are of cloth to match the smock and can be made to form breeches or bloomers by adjusting strap at knee. Worn with puttees, this costume would do equally well for riding or tramping.

For camping, riding, mountain climbing, the khaki shell skirt above buttoning down front and back is most useful; misses' and ladies' sizes, $4.75; white madras waist, sizes 34 to 44, $2.95

The heavy-weight Shaker-knit college sweater in center, maroon or navy, a slip-over model, will stand rough wear and give comforting warmth on cool summer evenings; sizes 10 to 16 years, $5.95

At left, kha i-colored bloomers, $2.45, and middy blouse to match, $1.95, both in sizes 8 to 20 years, would be most appropriate for the type of life in girls' camps where tennis and boating prevail

Smock of blue or khaki Trouville cloth at the right, 36 to 42 bust or 14 to 20 years, $4; putnees, a bloomer-like garment to match, $4; stitched khaki hat, $1; puttees of tan or black cowhide, $3.50
