The Story . . .

The action covers one day and takes place in the castle and grounds of Aguas Frescas, in the domain of Count Almaviva, near eighteenth-century Seville.

Act I

R#1-3664

A half-furnished room in the castle. Morning.

R#2-3665

Tiring of his wife, Count Almaviva is attentive to her maid, Suzanna. She informs her husband-to-be, Figaro, who plans to divert the Count's attention and speed the wedding plans. Complications ensue when the scandal-monger, Basilio, discovers both the Count and the adolescent page Cherubino in Susanna's apartment. Furious, the Count gives Cherubino a commission in his regiment and orders him from the castle.

Act II

R#3-3666

The Countess' apartment. Later the same morning.

R#4-3667

Figaro plans to shame the Count into returning to his unhappy wife by dressing Cherubino as the Countess and sending him to keep a lovers' tryst. The plot fails, and Figaro finds himself caught in a trap of his own making when the revengeful Dr. Bartolo presents him with a contract of marriage on behalf of the aging Marcellina.

INTERMISSION

Act III

R#5-3668

A hall in the castle. Afternoon.

R#6-3669

Without Figaro's knowledge, Susanna and the Countess continue plans to curb the Count's philandering. Susanna herself invites the Count to an evening rendezvous, and a letter is sent to indicate the place. Meanwhile, Figaro is discovered to be the long-lost son of Marcellina and Dr. Bartolo, and a wedding climaxes the occasion.

Act IV

The garden of the castle. Evening.

R#7-3670

Figaro, learning of the appointment of Susanna and the Count, believes her to be unfaithful and goes to the garden to intercept her. There Susanna, dressed as the Countess, makes him suffer for his suspicions, and together they set a trap for the Count. A penitent Count is forgiven by the Countess and all ends happily.
