COMPREHENSIVE GUIDE TO THE MANUSCRIPTS COLLECTION AND TO THE PERSONAL PAPERS IN THE UNIVERSITY ARCHIVES

INTRODUCTION

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE COLLECTION

The history of the Manuscripts Collection and University Archives at the University of Washington mirrors that of similar collections nationwide. Growing awareness of the importance of such collections and their authoritativeness as documentation has stimulated their proliferation. While collecting has not increased on a scale commensurate with the rate at which archival documentation has been generated, it is exuberant compared with the era before 1959. The result is an expanding national network of great promise. Fulfillment of this promise rests with library and historical society administrators, public officials, legislators, and the general public, as well as with archival and manuscript practitioners. The brief chronicle of the development of the University of Washington Libraries Manuscripts Collection and University Archives suggests the history of a host of other repositories---substitute the name of another and the story would be much the same---and its history is instructive for that reason.

Although some individual manuscripts had been donated earlier, the purchase of Clarence Booth Bagley's collection of Northwest Americana in 1919 marks the effective origin of the Manuscripts Collection. Additions to the Collection were contributed regularly through the close collaboration of Bagley, historian Edmond S. Meany, and librarian Charles Wesley Smith. These three also were primarily responsible for publishing the Washington Historical Quarterly until Bagley's death in 1932 and Meany's in 1935.[1] The WHQ was the medium they used for publishing edited versions of documents they collected, recording reminiscences of and about pioneers, and for publishing articles based on the collection.

Beginning in 1935, and continuing over two decades, a series of large accessions was given to the Library. The largest of these were:

1935 Edwin G. Ames collection, 84 linear feet, relating to Puget Mill Co. and subsidiary business operations of Ames and Pope and Talbot.
1935 Thomas Burke collection, 40 feet, including his personal papers, records of his law firm, papers of his wife Caroline, of his father-in-law John J. McGilvra, and of his business colleague, Daniel Hunt Gilman.
1935 Edmond S. Meany papers, 41 feet.
1938 Henry Suzzallo papers, 35 feet.
1941 Senator Wesley L. Jones papers, 147 feet.
1950 Seattle Repertory Playhouse records (including Washington State Theater), 55 feet.
1954 Port Blakely Mill Company records, 84 feet.
1956 Merrill and Ring Lumber Company records, 80 feet.

Large additions were made subsequently to records of the latter two firms. By 1958 the size of the collection measured about 600 linear feet. Responding to a new conception of collection development it would grow to approximately 13,700 linear feet by 1980.

In 1946, Professors Charles M. Gates of the University of Washington History Department and Herman J. Deutsch of the Washington State College History Department, recognizing the need to preserve manuscript and archival sources, agreed to share the responsibility for collecting Washington State archival materials. The University of Washington would be responsible for collecting west of the Cascade crest, while Washington State College would collect in eastern Washington. Both professors hoped that financial support from their respective institutions would be forthcoming. However, despite the demonstrable success of both at collecting, as measured by past efforts, institutional support remained as deficient as it always had been.

The problem of truly comprehensive collecting was, however, more extensive than either historian had conceived. At that time the nation-wide perception of manuscript collecting was a limited one, rooted in the concept of "historical manuscripts". This attitude considered archival documentation an adjunct or embellishment to historical research, not the foundation for many kinds of authoritative studies. This limited perception prevailed in the period before 1960 and has only recently been fading to any significant extent.

In Professor Gates' program, J. Ronald Todd, head of the UW Libraries Reference Division, was liaison for the Libraries, out of which liaison was to emerge the Libraries' assumption of primary responsibility for manuscript collecting.

The UW Libraries began moving away from the traditional pattern in December, 1958, with two major donations. First were the papers of controversial Interior Department Secretary, Richard A. Ballinger, relating to the politically divisive Ballinger-Pinchot controversy over national conservation policy. Within a week the papers of Stephen F. Chadwick were added. Chadwick had been a Democratic Party leader who turned Republican in 1940 after serving as National Commander of the American Legion.

These accessions marked the effective beginning of a more comprehensible collecting program under establishment of archival agreements, with persons and organizations, for systematic transfers of their inactive papers and records to the Libraries. With this new emphasis the Archives and Manuscripts Division has been able to minimize one of the characteristic features of the "historical manuscripts" period, which was the large role played by chance in collecting. Instead, the Division has been placed in the role of a records manager for people and organizations whose archival materials are collected routinely.

By following out this contemporaneous collecting emphasis, truly comprehensive documentary coverage can be approximated, which aims as well at attaining consecutiveness for major record series. The objective of this program is to make archival documentation authoritative. In being nearest to the participants in any event or development, archival documentation, if it is collected in this manner, will withstand evidential tests even in a court of law, one ultimate test of its validity.

Without attempting an exhaustive list of archival agreements, a partial listing will provide an indication of the scope of subject matter in the Manuscripts Collection alone:

Allied Arts of Seattle
Alpine Lakes Protection Society (ALPS)
American Civil Liberties Union, Washington
Columbia Basin Inter-Agency Committee
Council of Jewish Women, Seattle Section
Northwest Public Power Association
Seattle Art Museum
State Labor Council (AFL-CIO)
Urban League of Seattle
Washington Education Association
Washington Environmental Council
Washington Forest Protection Association
Washington State Nurses Association

Not only are records of organizations collected in this way, but personal papers as well. Examples are the papers of Bernice Stern, Ann Widditsch, Stephen F. Chadwick, Thomas O. Wimmer, and Merle Adlum.

Another unique feature of the collecting program was the establishment of special projects of long and short duration. Some projects were started with a major initial effort, recognizing that they could not be sustained at that level but could be continued as opportunity appeared. Of special importance are the various ethnic projects. In these, because of the sparseness of normal archival source material, taped interviews represent a significant part of the overall documentation collected. Background on these projects is given at the beginning of each project section of the Guide.

Prior to 1958, a modest beginning was made on a Scandinavian-American Project in conjunction with a general program to strengthen the Libraries' Scandinavian literature and language holdings. Professor Walter Johnson, together with Henry Fabbe, publisher of Svenska Posten, spearheaded this project. Many papers of Scandinavian-Americans continue to be accessioned independently of the original project.

Other particularly strong ethnic collections were the result of the Afro-American Project, started in 1964, the Japanese-American Project, started in 1967, and the Jewish-American Project, also begun in 1967. The former two projects began strongly, with special coordinators, and were sustained at a relatively high level for about three or four years. The Jewish-American Project gained considerable momentum after 1970 and has been a beneficiary of the Jewish Federation of Greater Seattle since 1974. The taped interviews recorded in these projects have provided crucial documentation for the immigration and settling-in periods; they complement the meager textual documentation. Materials collected for these projects are described under the project name in the Guide.

Since 1966, because of space considerations, there has been no serious effort to collect more business records. Instead, business firms are encouraged to establish their own archives. Business records, however, constitute a major part of the Manuscripts Collection. The extractive phase of the forest industries of north-west Washington is well documented through the mid-1950's. The coal industry is represented by the Oregon Improvement Company records and by papers of various mining engineers. Linked closely with these records of resource development and administration are those of conservation organizations and trade associations, as well as personal papers of conservationists and of business and civic leaders. These combine to provide a substantial body of documentation in the area of private influence on public policy formation relating to the conservation and exploitation of resources.

The University Archives was formally established on August 1, 1967, as a section of the new University Archives and Manuscripts Division. Although some UW archival materials had been part of the Manuscripts Collection, they were modest by comparison with the quantity that was to follow. In the first year of active collecting, an existing space problem became acute, resulting in practical cessation of the University Archives collecting program and in a concomitant abrupt curtailment of the acquisitions program for the Manuscripts Collection. Relief was provided by the allocation of a former warehouse to serve as the University Records Center for both transient and archival records. Departmental records and papers of UW faculty and administrators were transferred from the Manuscripts Collection, thereby releasing space for fresh manuscript accessions.

With this transfer and the resumption of collecting, the University Archives grew to about 1,670 linear feet of papers and records by June 30, 1972. This volume has expanded slowly to about 3,600 linear feet. Slow growth has been caused by recurrent space shortages affecting both units---again, a nationwide problem.

In the Guide only the private papers of faculty and administrators are reported, not the public records portion represented by records of major offices and departments of the University.

INTELLECTUAL CONTROL OF THE COLLECTION

When the Manuscripts Section was established in January, 1958, its sole task, as viewed then, was to bring some order to the Manuscripts Collection. The collection, about 600 linear feet, had been administered by the Reference Division as an adjunct to the Northwest Collection. Due to inadequate staff, the manuscripts in the collection were dealt with episodically by untrained personnel who lacked even an informal exposure to the world of archivy, there being only meager opportunity for formal training. Indeed, only two years earlier Lester J. Cappon had offered the then novel idea that the popular term "historical manuscripts," as that term relates to organic papers and records generated by persons and families, was synonymous with archives, and that modern manuscripts unquestionably lent themselves to archival treatment.[2] His view has now been generally accepted. The UW system of processing and description is based on Cappon's premise.

In 1962, the present system of intellectual control was established. Previously a bifurcated system had been employed, based on that pioneered by the Library of Congress in the early 1950's. The Library of Congress model has two components: the card catalog and supplementary registers, the register being an elaborated inventory in page format.[3] These two components were independent, not integrated. This model, in turn, became that for the descriptive cataloging of manuscripts in the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections.

[2]Cappon, Lester J., "Historical Manuscripts As Archives..," The American Archivist, April 1956. pp. 101-110.

The UW system eliminated the card catalog, and in its place established three cumulative indexes: for proper and geopolitical names, for subjects, and for chronology. Inventory/Guides and Data Sheets are indexed, with the process constituting a single integrated system.[4] Significantly, the Library of Congress has now perfected its own single integrated system and plans to eliminate the card catalog once it has been indexed.

The other part of the UW system responds to the need for bringing under intellectual control the type of massive 20th century accessions outlined above. In recognizing that such accessions share the characteristics of public archives, archival principles have been adapted to the intellectual control of the private papers and records in the Manuscripts Collection.[5] There are five record levels, each one representing a further refinement of the previous level in the hierarchy. Starting with the least refined, these levels are:

Accession/record group level
Subgroup level
Series level
Folder level
Item level

General policy is to achieve control to the subgroup level or beyond at the time of accessioning, before placement in the collection stacks. Subgroups reflect separate corporate activities of the person or corporate body; their listing conveys a good profile of the accession, as well as a sense of its complexity. All subgroups names are listed in the Cumulative Name Index (CNI).

Berner, "Arrangement and Description of Manuscripts." The DLQ special issue is titled "Management of Archives and Manuscripts Collections in Libraries."

The CNI also lists names of major correspondents and some geopolitical names. Because proper names are inevitably associated with activity, and activity is inherently subject matter, proper name control provides one mode of topical subject access without requiring a content analysis. The UW system emphasizes proper name control as a means of leading researchers to their subject material.

The Cumulative Subject Index (CSI) is designed to provide topical subject access. Content analysis, however, does not proceed beyond the subgroup level. Consequently, only the primary topical characteristics of the accession as a whole are noted. Topical subjects of any subgroups that are different from that of the accession of which the subgroup is part will also be in the CSI. By these measures topical subject control is achieved at the subgroup level for the entire Manuscripts Collection.

Subject headings are controlled by scope notes, which are an appendix in the Division's Manual. There are fourteen (14) major subject headings for main lines of human activity. Each of these is normally subdivided once, sometimes twice:

Politics and government - natural resources
Art - visual art - painting

A geopolitical subdivision normally follows:

Politics and government - natural resources - Pacific Northwest
Art - visual art - painting - Washington

The Manual should be consulted by those who are interested in guidelines used in establishing these subject headings.

COMPOSITION OF GUIDE ENTRIES AND INDEXES

The Guide reflects the principles embodied in the UW System. Entries are arranged as follows:

Each accession is identified by a name followed by birth-death dates of the person, if known.
The title line normally indicates:

A. "Papers" for persons; "Records" for corporate bodies. If only one type of record series is represented in an accession, the title of that series is specified, as in, "Tape recorded interview," or "Diary".
B. "Collection" designates an artificially assembled collection; "third party" in nature rather than the writings of, and communications to, the person for whom the collection is named.

Others generated the materials and the subsequent collector acquired and preserved them.

Span dates are used to indicate the entire time span covered by an accession. Bulk dates sometimes follow, indicating the time span within which most of the material is concentrated.

Biographical/historical information concentrates on only those biographical or historical features that are reflected in the papers. This section is necessarily brief, relying on the scope and contents note to convey more biographical or historical information.

Scope and contents note indicates the main record series, often followed by inclusive dates of the series, and with some indication of the capacity in which the papers or records were generated if it is not clearly implied.

Subgroups are listed following the paragraph on scope and content. Inclusive dates covered by the subgroup normally follow each subgroup name.

Research publication information is a measure of research use of the collection and is noted whenever known. This includes publication of books and articles and completion of a master's thesis or doctoral dissertation.

Provenance records have been maintained since 1958. Where "unknown" is noted for provenance, this usually refers to manuscripts acquired before that time.

Each index is arranged in a single alphabet:

The Name Index includes names of major correspondents, subject and geopolitical names, and names of authors. Because of space problems, these are omitted in the contents notes.

The Subject Index includes the 14 major topical subject headings and their subdivisions. These are not traced in the contents notes, but are usually implied in the subgroup listing and in other contents notes.

ACCESS TO THE COLLECTIONS

Locations. The Manuscripts Collection is housed in the Suzzallo Library; the University Archives is in the University Records Center. Administration of both is from the Suzzallo Library. Because many accessions are in a location remote from the campus, users are urged to communicate with the Archives and Manuscripts staff prior to their intended arrival. This will allow any accessions needed by them to be retrieved from remote storage should that be necessary. Normal open hours are 8 to 12 and 1 to 5, weekdays only.

Research use of the Collections. Access to the collections is provided under terms agreed to by the University and the donor at the time of the gift. While the University encourages donors to specify unrestricted use of their materials, it recognizes that private donors, in order to protect privacy or confidentiality, may impose restrictions for a reasonable period of time. Users are encouraged to do the requisite background reading on their topic so that they will derive maximum benefit from the collections. These are not browsing collections but are intended to buttress the research of those who are well prepared.

Although the public records in the University Archives are not listed in this Guide, they are open to access under terms of the Washington State Public Disclosures Act of 1973. Public records in custody of the Manuscripts Section are similarly governed.

To facilitate research by those who do not live in the Seattle area, copies of inventories may be borrowed for two weeks if a lending copy is available. If none is available, copies may be made at nominal cost. The inventories enable the user to be specific in making requests, either for having material retrieved before arrival, or for initiating photocopying requests.

Photocopying and audio copying. Many considerations affect the copying of manuscripts and of sound recordings. Although the requester may specify a particular form of copying, the Division reserves the right to choose the appropriate form depending on the quantity desired, physical condition of the material, and other factors.

For fully processed accessions an entire accession, subgroup, or series may be microfilmed. If a substantial portion of a series is requested to be microfilmed, the Division reserves the right to require that the entire series be filmed. Normally the requester is required to pay the cost of producing both the positive, which he receives, and the negative, which remains with the Division.

The Division does not copy extensive quantities of unprocessed material for off-site users because of the search time required to locate specified items or types of items. In general, the Division cannot assume responsibility for copy requests which require subjective or judgmental selection.

CREDITS

This Guide probably never would have been compiled without a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The grant made it possible for the Libraries to hire Ms. Marilyn Priestley to compile the entries. Ms. Priestley's prior experience in charge of the processing program of the Manuscripts Section contributed significantly to her understanding of the UW system and her ability to work with the uneven quality of the Division's descriptions of the accessions to standardize them for the Guide. An intended by-product of this compilation has been the improvement of the overall descriptive program, bringing it to a level where we can recommend that a COM program be considered as a replacement for the manual system.

Gail Newman rendered invaluable service, typing a majority of the entries, key-punching most of the index cards, and dealing with many technical problems associated with the form and correctness of entries. Steven King helped with the lay-out and preparation of the index pages for publication. Edmond Mignon and one of his Library School students, Keith Ferguson, helped in the early planning stages with their expert advice on programming the indexes. Pierre White of the Academic Computer Center carried the programming to its conclusion. Lynne Rhoads edited the Guide for publication and supervised it through the publication and distribution process. Errors and other shortcomings that remain are my own, for the final editing was my responsibility.

Throughout the project the expertise of Karyl Winn, Curator of Manuscripts, was indispensable in matters of entry composition, resolution of long-standing problems in the areas of subject heading formulations, form of corporate entry, and in other related problems.

Archives of Northwest Art

Initiated by the Henry Gallery in about 1972, this project was continued and expanded in the Manuscripts Section by LaMar Harrington from 1975 to 1978. Several moderate-sized accessions have been received, and numerous interviews with artists and others important in the Northwest art scene have been recorded. Grants from the Seattle, King County and Washington State Arts Commissions funded a series of important interviews during 1977. During preparation of the Guide several accessions of records of art organizations inadvertently were included in the main listing instead of in the Archives of Northwest Art section. The user may find all art-related accessions by consulting the subject and name indexes.

Japanese-American Project

Begun with cooperation from the Japanese-American Citizens' League, Seattle Chapter, in 1955, this project had the direction of two successive field workers, Sally Kazama and Delores Goto. They acquired personal papers, recorded interviews, and arranged for filming records of Japanese-American churches. Geographically this material emphasizes Seattle, but it also documents Japanese-American life in eastern Oregon. Coverage of the Japanese-American evacuation from the West Coast during World War II is particularly strong.

Jewish Archives Project

Begun in 1968, this project has been a joint effort of the Manuscripts Section and the Women's Division of the Jewish Federation of Seattle. Archival agreements have been made with major Seattle Jewish institutions having records, personal papers have been accessioned, and photographs have been duplicated. Many photographs have been transferred to the Photography Collection in the Special Collections Division. Interviews have been recorded with over 200 individuals, mainly longtime residents of Seattle. Since 1974 the project has been partially funded by the Jewish Federation of Seattle. In this section religious bodies not followed by a place name are located in the greater Seattle area.

North Cascades History Project

Conceived in 1971 after the creation of the North Cascades National Park in 1968, the project did not develop until 1973, when funding from the Mountaineers and the Washington State American Revolution Bicentennial Commission allowed extensive field work. Project director Harry Majors traversed the territory, defined as the mountainous region north of Snoqualmie Pass in Washington State. Photographs were copied, and many interviews were recorded with early settlers, longtime Forest Service employees, and early mountain climbers. A smattering of personal papers was acquired or borrowed for copying. A bibliography was produced listing archival sources concerning the North Cascades in Washington repositories.

Scandinavian Archives

In conjunction with a general program to strengthen the Library's Scandinavian holdings a Scandinavian-American project was launched by Professor Walter Johnson and Henry Fabbe prior to 1958. Fabbe, publisher of the Svenska Posten in Seattle, solicited records and personal papers through his newspaper. Many of the resulting accessions were Swedish. For several years from 1972 on Library staff members Emma Nelson and Clinton Hyde worked to broaden the archival holdings related to Norwegian, Danish, and Icelandic communities, primarily in Seattle. During 1975-76 the Emigrantsinstitutet in Vaxjo, Sweden collaborated with the Library on a microfilming project of Swedish-American church records in the Northwest.
