PROGRAM NOTES

In March 1781, Mozart traveled to Vienna, leaving the employ of Count Hieronymus Colloredo, the archbishop of Salzburg. Free from the oppressive authority that had governed much of his life, Mozart was now able to make his name as a freelance composer and performer and to marry his beloved Constanze Weber, which he did in August, 1782. The gaiety and sparkle of Vienna and of Mozart’s new-found happiness was to be reflected in much of his music.

It was during these Vienna years that Mozart composed a considerable amount of literature for small ensemble, whether to be performed as Haus Musik or to enrich the repertoire of the traveling and/or amateur musician. Nacht Musik (night music) had gained a certain popularity in this time: compositions which were entitled, either Nocturne, Serenade or, simply, Night Music, and were most often performed out-of-doors. It is mainly from this collection of night-pieces that this evening's program has been chosen.

In one of Mozart's letters to his father he writes of having attended several parties on his name-day, October 31, 1781. "At 11 o'clock at night I was serenaded by 2 clarinets, 2 horns and 2 bassoons who played a Nacht Musik of my own composition...The players had the street doors opened and, when they had arranged themselves in the courtyard, surprised me in the most delightful way in the world, just as I was about to get undressed, with the first E-flat chord." The only piece of Mozart's that fit this description is the sextet version of the Serenade in E-flat major, K. 375, a cheerful and expansive work which seems to reflect Mozart's new-found freedom and happiness. (There is a revised version of this Serenade, dated 1782, to which Mozart adds two oboes in order to complete the requirements for the standard Viennese Harmoniemusik wind band, so popular at the time.)

While little is known of the background of the Horn Duets, there is an unusual story that accompanies these seldom-played pieces. The manuscript bears the note "untern Kegelschrieben"—"while playing skittles" (bowling). Seemingly, Mozart was in a bowling alley one evening when some itinerant musicians passed through, played a few pieces and then asked Mozart to write something for them. If this is indeed the case, these musicians must have been very fine performers, considering that the horn of Mozart's time was principally confined to the series of natural tones, to which only the best of players could add a few in-between notes by various technical means. His demands upon the players, particularly in the upper register, make these pieces unique.

During these Vienna years Mozart became very friendly with the family of the well-known botanist Niclaus Joseph Jacquin (1727-1817). Niclaus' son, Gottfried, and daughter, Francisca, were very gifted musicians and it is most likely that Mozart wrote the notturni for them. This set of six pieces, written at various times, is scored for 2 sopranos, bass and wind instruments. For years it was thought that Mozart did not actually write these delightful little love songs, as the society of Friends of Music in Vienna possessed a copy of the notturni, which gave the name of Godofredo nobile de Jacquin as the composer. There can be little doubt that the true author of these works was in fact Mozart once we recognize the similarities between certain of the notturni and themes within his larger works such as the Jupiter Symphony, the Magic Flute and the Requiem. The nocturnes were originally scores for bassethorns and clarinets. This evening only clarinets are being used, with the bass clarinet taking the place of the bassethorn.

Unlike the Serenade in E-flat Major, nothing whatever is known of the circumstances surrounding the composition of the Serenade in c minor, K.388. The autograph is signed and dated di Wolfgang Amadeo Mozart, 1782, yet it is so different from the E-flat Serenade. The darkly passionate style of this work is in direct contrast to the expansive light-heartedness of K. 375.

Program notes by Emilie Berendsen
With special thanks to Goodwin and Theodore Deacon for their assistance with the translations of the poetry for the notturni.
Luci care, luci belle,
cari lumi, amate stelle,
date calma a questo core!
Se per voi sospiro e moro,
ido mio, mio bel tesoro, forza e solo del Dio d'amore.

Ecco quel fero istante:
Nice, mia Nice, addio!
Come vivrò, ben mio
cosi lontan da te?
Io vivrò sempre in pene,
io non avrò piu bene;
e tu, chi sa se mai
ti soverrai di me!

Mi lagnèro tacendo
della mia sorte avara;
ma ch'io non t'amì, o cara,
non lo sperar da me.
Crudele! in che t'offendo,
se resta a questo petto
il misero diletto
di sospirar per te?

Se lontan, ben mio, tu sei
son eterni i di per me,
Son momento i giorni miei,
idol mio, vicino a te.
Più non si trovano
tra mille amanti
sol due bell'anime,
che sian costanti,
e tutti parlanò
di fedeltà.
E il reo costume
tanto s'avanza,
che la costanza
di chi ben ama
ormai si chiama
semplicità.

Due Pupille Amabili
m'han piegato il core
e se pieta non chiedo
a quelle luci belle per quelle, si per quelle io morìro d'amore.

Dear lights, beautiful lights,
beloved lights, beloved stars,
bring calm to this heart!
If for you I sigh and perish,
my beloved, my beautiful treasure, strength comes only from the god of love.

How cruel a moment:
Nice, my Nice, farewell!
How can I live, my beloved so far away from you?
I will always live in pain,
I will have no more joy;
and you, who knows
if you will ever think of me!

I will suffer silently
my bitter fate;
but do not hope, my dear,
that I do not love you.
Cruel one! how do I offend you when there remains in my breast the wretcheding delight of sighing for you?

If you are far away, my dear,
the day seems endless to me,
but my days seem only a moment,
my beloved, when I am near you.

Among a thousand lovers
you will find no more than two fair souls
who are constant,
though all speak of fidelity wickedness is too common
the custom
that the constancy
of those who love truly is now called simplicity.

Two loving eyes
enfolded in my heart
and I do not ask for pity
from such shining lights for them, yes for them
I will die of love.
