TUTTE LE BOCHE BELLE .............................................................................. CLAUDIO MONTEVERDI (1567-1643)
My faithless enemy dares all beautiful mouths in this black face to a kiss.
Kisses are left stamped, like loving stars on the beautiful black veil that the sky now dons.
O, why can’t I become the sky?
For then I’d have around my eyes a thousand stars for a thousand kisses.

SOIR SUR LA PLAINE ..................................................................................LILI BOULANGER (1893-1918)
Toward the west, there, the sky is all golden; Across the deserted pasture, where the path falls, the penetrating odor of cut hay exhales, and it is the emotive hour when earth sleeps.
The scythe of the harvester has passed over the land, and rest follows the work of long days;
An occasional plough, forgotten from labor, leaves, like an uplifted arm, from the solitary furrows.
The night in the east sprinkles its fine ashes; alone, in setting, lingers a glow of fire;
and in the darkness, which grows little by little, the whiteness of the road is difficult to divine.
Then all becomes somber, and thrusts into a great unity.
The sky, darkened, rejoins the immense plain…
Listen!… a great sigh crosses the silence…and behold how the heart of the day has ceased!
Poem by Albert Samain (1858-1900)

FEAR AN BHATA (Irish folk tune) .........................................................arr. David Mooney (b. 1964)
I often look from the highest hill that I might see, oh boatman
Will you come tonight, or will you come tomorrow
Oh sorry will I be if you do not come at all

Refrain: Oh my boatman, na hóro eile
Oh my boatman, na hóro eile
Oh my boatman, na hóro eile
My farewell to you wherever you go

My heart is broken, bruised
Often tears are running down from my eyes
Will you come tonight, or will I wait up for you
Or close the door with a sad sigh?

Refrain

I gave you love and cannot deny
It’s not love that lasts a year or a season
But a love that began when I was a child
And that will not wither until death do take me.

Refrain
Hello Audience, and welcome to the UW Chorale and Chamber Singers’ fall concert. For University Chorale’s set, we are exploring music that evokes a sensation of “vastness of the plains” and the brightness of the sun, or lack thereof. This summer, my family and I were fortunate enough to spend a week in Oregon’s rugged Eagle Cap Wilderness in the Wallowa Mountains. We hiked to alpine lakes, fly-fished in streams and slept in a large meadow speckled with purple and orange wildflowers. Upon return, I discovered that University Chorale was selected to sing at the 2015 NafME regional music conference in Spokane. Fresh from the energy of being in the wild, and inspired by the idea of singing in Spokane, a city surrounded by plains and prairies, I created this program. In Monk’s Fields/Clouds, textless motives combine to create a tapestry of sounds that bring forth a sensation of looking at a distant horizon, where fields and clouds meet in the mind’s eye. In Comin’ to Town and Oklahoma/Finale, uniquely American forms—cowboy poetry and musical theater—showcase the vitality of the human spirit, with joy and humor. But sometimes glancing across a wide and open space can bring longing and sadness, as in the tragic Irish folk ballade Fear an Bhata, which tells of a young woman’s loss of her love at sea, and her daily trip to the edge of a cliff to look out at the ocean for him. In Soir sur la Plaine, early twentieth century composer Lili Boulanger uses forward-looking, evocative harmonies and textures to depict the moment when the sunset is so complete that the sky’s edge melds with the earth’s landscape. The remaining two works explore the bright warmth of sun, and the “silent sun” (night). Monteverdi’s Tutte le bocche belle is an alba (a song to be sung in the early morning to a secret lover) that imagines how every star in the sky represents a kiss, a physical “mark against darkness” for eternity. Utah-based composer Bradford’s Give me your Splendid, Silent Sun celebrates Walt Whitman’s genius poetic sense, and speaks of setting up home, family and farm complete with “serene-moving animals, teaching content.” May tonight’s program “teach a content” for you, drawing you away from the busyness of life for a short respite.

DER ABEND (sung in German) ................................................................. RICHARD STRAUSS (1864-1949)

Bright beaming god! Sink.
The plains are thirsting for refreshing dew, the people are weary.
Lo! Thy steeds are panting. Phoebus descend into the sea.

Behold the one who beckons you, buoyed up, and sweetly smiling on the sea’s deep crystal wave.
Does your heart recognize her? Faster fly the steeds—the divine Thetys beckons.

The driver leaps from his chariot into her arms. He throws the reins to Cupid.
The steeds stand still, and drink from the cool, crystal flood.

Heaven’s wings unfold, and silently, gently comes the soft night.
Sweet love comes. Rest and love! Phoebus, the loving one, rests.

Final Scene and Chorus

Glory to God in the Highest, all honor and praise to the Almighty,
And peace to all on earth who are of good will.

To save the world from evil, you came in humility, not in obligation.
O child of heavenly beauty, we laud you, extol you, Gloria in excelsis Deo.

Mary: Upon me God bestowed his favor, and I will never cease to praise him,
I bore to the world a savior, who will be king forever, I bow in humble devotion, over the child who has come to save us. No rose was ever fairer, his beauty fills my heart with deep emotion.
My thoughts I cannot capture, my spirit lifts in rapture, it soars ever higher, for born is the promised
Messiah. Amen

...of life, and peace:

THE PEACE OF WILD THINGS ........................................................................... JAKE RUNESTAD
Good Evening. We are thankful that you are here to share with Chamber Singers in our evening’s program living on the edge... an interweaving of text and tune that describes an artist’s life—living on the razors edge of life and creativity. The friction of the whetstone—where blade, water, steel, and stone meet to create an ever-sharpening blade—is that same friction in life that generates human creativity, growth and beauty.

We begin with Remember Not Lord Our Offences, a somber prayer that the sinful might receive freedom in grace, listen for the spicy, Purcellian dissonance on the words “sin” and “spare us, good Lord.” Next we shift suddenly from darkness searching for light to Spirited Light, an uplifting fanfare of rhythm, soaring and rising patters and glissandi, voices in very high registers that capture the movement of light uplifting darkness so that the “mudbound spirit might soar.” Richard Strauss’ epic Der Abend is a tone poem of the more traditional sort, a through-composed dramatic rendition of text. Normally an orchestral work, think Don Juan or Death and Transfiguration, this is an orchestral work for sixteen part chorus, depicting the setting of the sun “Phoebus” into the arms of his lover “Thetys” the sea. My Flight to Heaven is a “death and transfiguration” of sorts. Set to a text by Shakespeare, the poet speaks to death as release of pain, and comfort for the weary, so that he might “take flight.” The final scene of Respighi’s Laud to the Nativity, is a traditional telling of the shepherds-angels-Mary and baby story, through the lens of his particular madrigal-meets-Puccini-Pines of Rome splendor. Mary sings a wistful arioso as if lamenting her state, when she is suddenly interrupted by the angels’ chorus. The choir then sings a beautiful lullaby followed by final exhortations by Mary accompanied by the angels’ lush “Amens.” Who of us has not laid awake at night, pondering and wrestling with life? We close tonight’s program with Peace of Wild Things which describes the loneliness of the night transitioning into hopefulness as the poet considers “my thoughts turn to the Peace of Wild things, who do not tax their lives with forethought of grief.” Images of grace and light, woven through tonight’s program, return for a final bittersweet, conclusion.
