PROGRAM

SERENADE FOR WINDS, IN D MINOR, Op. 44 (1878)
  Moderato, quasi marcia
  Minuetto: Tempo di minuetto
  Andante con moto
  Finale: Allegro molto

Dvořák composed the SERENADE FOR WINDS IN D MINOR, Op. 44 over a couple of weeks in 1878. It was premiered in Prague and conducted by the composer during a concert featuring many of his works. The four-movement work starts with a March-like opening very similar to marches that preceded Mozart’s serenades. The second movement, Minuetto, features two Czech dances, the “sousedská” in the minuet section, and the “furiant” in the trio. The third movement, Andante con moto is considered the slow movement but has a forward-moving feeling because of the syncopated figure in the horns, which runs through most of the movement. The finale starts with a polka theme but also features various other melodies; the movement includes a recap of the march from the beginning. The piece is scored for two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons, and three horns. The composer later added the cello and bass parts. The contrabassoon part was attached ad lib since during Dvořák’s time it was hard to obtain the instrument.

INTERMISSION
The Serenade for Strings, in E Major, Op. 22 was composed in two weeks in 1875 and was premiered in Prague a year later. It was a busy year for Dvořák, during which he wrote his Symphony No. 5, String Quintet No. 2, Piano Trio No. 1, and the opera Vanda. Dvořák was also very happy with his marriage and the birth of his son, all of these emotions are evident in this beautiful and lively serenade. There are five movements in this work: Moderato, Tempo di Valse, Scherzo, Larghetto and Finale: Allegro Vivace. Except the finale all movements are in A-B-A form. The first movement begins with a very pleasing lyrical moderato; the middle section features a dancelike melody after which the original melody returns. The second movement, Tempo di Valse, is a beautiful waltz, which goes back and forth between major and minor keys giving an unsettling feeling. The third movement, the Scherzo, has a lively theme, which is varied throughout the movement. The fourth movement, Larghetto is slow beautiful movement; the middle section is a little more moving and lively but the composer returns to the original theme to end the movement. The Finale is dynamic, rhythmic and includes interesting Czech harmonies. It also includes the opening of the first movement but soon returns to its original material to end the work.
