PROGRAM NOTES

Carol Sams - O Wild Angels
"The pieces were written last fall (1977) for Marhi'Nixon."

John Rahn - Three Titbits
"At the time I wrote Three Titbits, I was habitually using several kinds of rhythmic/pitch structures recursively to generate serially ordered precisely-weighted aggregates (e.g. 12 A's, 11 Bb's, 10 B's, . . . 1 Ab, in a particular non-trivial order) from some simple permutation. For example, in the first piece, the order of pitches in the cello is a second-generation derivative of the particularly (slow) chromatic scale played by the clarinet.

Other than that, these pieces are just plain silly; naughty giggles inspired by phrases (the titles) from Shakespeare's Bowdy, written particularly for my friends Ed Riley, clarinet, and Mrs. Ed (Marcia Lederer) Riley, cello."

I. Female-on-top position. The clarinet is very passive.
II. for peculiar trout.
III. Prostitutes populated the environs of Winchester Cathedral.
A dialogue reaches the usual conclusion.

Diane Thomé - Anais

Anais, for tape, violoncello and piano, was composed during the summer of 1976 while Ms. Thome held a State University of New York research grant. The tape portion of the work was synthesized in the analog studio at the State University of New York in Binghamton. The piece is dedicated to the memory of writer Anais Nin, who died shortly before its premiere in March, 1977 in Los Angeles.

Alvin Etler - Concerto for Violin and Woodwind Quintet

Alvin Etler (b. Battle Creek, Iowa, 1913) studied composition with Arthur Shepherd and Paul Hindemith. Also a talented oboist, he played in theater orchestras as a child and during 1938-40 was with the Indianapolis Symphony.

As a parallel development to his two earlier wind quintets, dating from 1955 and 1957, Etler's Concerto for Violin with Wind Quintet is clearly neo-classic in form and content, written in a language consistent with the time of its composition. Harmonic structure and melodic line are frequently based on fourths, and Etler is fond of fashioning close textures built on clusters of seconds. Indeed, the quintet sound undergoes additional thickening in the Concerto, as duple and triplet motivic figures are employed simultaneously, especially in the first movement. Sonorities of individual or paired instruments are also used to good effect, as with the horn and violin opening of the second movement, or the clever doubling of piccolo and high-register violin in the third. A true concerto results overall, the quintet assuming an almost-orchestral mass as well as a sensitive accompaniment to the rugged boldness and lyric eloquence of the solo violin.
Pierre Boulez - First Piano Sonata

The Sonata was originally dedicated to Boulez’s teacher, Rene Leibowitz, but the dedication was removed, as Leibowitz “corrected” the score when he saw it. Boulez was furious, and never spoke to him again.

William O. Smith - Mandala

“The musical materials for the large ensemble consist of 22 fragments for high instruments and voices and 22 for low. Each fragment is begun on cue from the conductor and repeated until the next cue. Since the conductor cues the performers one after the other the effect is that of a many-voiced double canon.

On top of this the smaller ensemble of improvising musicians and dancers superimpose their comments and embellishments derived from the materials of the large ensemble."
