UW MUSIC
2017-18 SEASON
George Gershwin remains one of the most revered and influential American composers of the 20th century. His combination of American styles and classical traditions has delighted listeners for generations. Following the immense success of one of his most popular pieces, Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin was commissioned to write a piano concerto to be premiered with Walter Damrosch conducting the New York Symphony. In preparation for writing this piece, Gershwin studied the concerto scores of older composers who had mastered challenging aspects of instrumentation and form. As a result the piece is forged in his distinct and popular jazz style with a "fast, slow, fast" form typical of classical concertos. Syncopated rhythms and seductive themes give the piece a distinct sound and style definitive of the composer. Despite the structural homage to his predecessors, Gershwin pioneers a new episodic style of concerto that has been a favorite of audiences since the premiere in 1925. The movements themselves are best described by the composer:

"The first movement employs the Charleston rhythm. It is quick and pulsating, representing the young, enthusiastic spirit of American life. It begins with a rhythmic motif given out by the kettle drums, supported by other percussion instruments and with a Charleston motif introduced by bassoons, horns, clarinets, and violas. The principal theme is announced by the bassoon. Later, a second theme is introduced by the piano.

The second movement has a poetic, nocturnal atmosphere which has come to be referred to as the American blues, but in a purer form than that in which they are usually treated.

The final movement reverts to the style of the first. It is an orgy of rhythms, starting violently and keeping the same pace throughout."

Symphony No. 5 in Bb Major, Op. 100

During World War II, valued composers such as Prokofiev, Shostakovich, Glière, Miaskovsky, Khatchaturian, and many others were evacuated from places of danger and placed in a home outside of Moscow – a sort of "Soviet Composers' Retreat." Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony was composed at this Soviet Composers' Retreat during the summer of 1944. This summer was filled with simultaneous turmoil and excitement as the raging battles in Russia began to finally see victory. Prokofiev describes the work as "a symphony of the greatness of the human spirit, a song of praise of free and happy mankind." Although he left us with no definitive connection to the events of WWII, the music undeniably carries moments of optimism and conflict which seem to musically embody war. The premiere of the piece in 1945 – as recalled by the famous Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter – featured Prokofiev with his hands frozen in the air, waiting for celebratory artillery fire to subside before beginning the piece. As Richter said, "There was something very significant in this, something symbolic. It was as if all of us – including Prokofiev – had reached some kind of shared turning point."

The first movement opens with the first theme plainly and directly stated by the bassoon and flute. A sense of overwhelming grandeur develops as this theme is fragmented and passed around the orchestra. The oboe and flute present the lyrical second theme. The remainder of the movement develops these themes and returns back to a recapitulation in typical sonata fashion. The second movement opens with a quick and agile ostinato passage in the violins, which will ultimately propel the entire movement. A clarinet introduces the main theme and other instruments soon begin to pass around the melodic material in different variations. The third movement opens in an ambiguous haze of sound. Yet again a clarinet emerges from this to present the beginning of the main theme. This theme of desire and longing ultimately becomes lost by the climactic uproar of a war machine barreling into the concert hall. The machine soon subsides and the peaceful tension returns to finish the movement. The finale begins with a brief introduction reminiscent of the innocence in the first movement. Brass fanfares and interjections from the strings and winds begin to overtake the development of the movement as the opening innocence becomes farther and farther away. In the closing moments of the symphony the cacophonous war machine returns and ushers in a flourish of orchestral sound and color.

The UW SYMPHONY is made up of music majors as well as students from departments all across campus. It rehearses twice weekly, and performs at least two concerts per quarter. Under the leadership of Dr. Rahbee since the fall of 2013, the UW Symphony has performed over 130 works, spanning from the early baroque through contemporary, and collaborated with faculty and guest soloists, as well as members of the Seattle Symphony and other local organizations. The orchestra has often collaborated with two Grammy-award winning artists: Ludovic Morlot (Affiliate Professor of Conducting and Seattle Symphony Music Director) and Stephen Stubbs (Senior Artist in Residence). Other collaborations have included an opera on period instruments with Pacific MusicWorks, a concert with jazz studies faculty, as well as the annual performance with the combined university choirs. Concerts are given in Meany Theater, as well as various other locations on campus, and occasionally at Benaroya Hall. From time to time during the school year, the orchestra may split up into smaller groups under the title UW Chamber Orchestras.
