Symphony No. 8 in F Major, Op. 93 ................................................................. LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN

Beethoven composed the majority of the Eighth Symphony, along with his popular Seventh Symphony, during the summer of 1812. Both of these works premiered on the same concert, similar to the premier concert of the Fifth and Sixth Symphony. The humor and lightness of this symphony is often lost among the towering Seventh and Ninth Symphonies, which are performed much more often. According to various accounts of the premiere, audiences were baffled as to why Beethoven chose to include this piece on the program. Beethoven was troubled by how audiences reacted to this piece, to which he commented "That's because it is so much better than the other." Despite such negative responses, Beethoven still thought of his "little symphony in F" as one of his best works.

Particularly in his Eighth Symphony, Beethoven includes many examples of musical jokes. From the very beginning of this piece the orchestra is off and running. He does not start with a slow or long introduction, but rather with a boisterous laughter from the entire orchestra. The symphony stumbles forward into the first theme. Just as this section begins to gain momentum, Beethoven introduces a slower lyrical tune in A Major. The rest of the first movement contains repetitions of the stumbling theme as well as other jokes, such as orchestrating the recapitulation to have the main theme presented by the bassoons, cellos, and double basses. The second movement, Allegretto scherzando, was inspired by a friend of Beethoven who had recently invented the metronome. The winds serve as the steady tick·tick·tick while the violins offer a perky and agile melody over the "metronome." He returns to the Mozart and Haydn tradition of a minuet for the third movement, a form which he had not included in a work since 1806. The minuet follows a traditional form with many Beethovenian twists and turns to surprise the listener, including a lyrical trio featuring the horn and clarinet. The finale of the piece is full of humor, energy, and excitement. Beethoven thwarts almost all harmonic expectations in this movement. Just when it seems Beethoven may conclude a theme or harmonic idea, he jolts the audience with sforzandos and takes the piece in a new direction.

Konzertstück in F for Four Horns and Orchestra, Op. 86

Robert Schumann, often regarded as one of the greatest composers of the Romantic era, became enamored with the horn during the first half of the 19th century. The valve horn had recently been invented during this time, which alleviated a lot of the pitch and clarity issues caused by natural horns. Schumann thought the newfound virtuosity of valve horn players to be extremely inspiring and as a result he produced the Konzertstück in F for Four Horns and Orchestra. The piece essentially serves as a three-movement concerto for four horns. The lively first movement features heroic themes based heavily off of the opening horn fanfare. The second movement, marked Romanze, highlights the composer’s mastery of lyrical writing. The mood becomes somewhat darker as themes are passed from the horns to the orchestra in a call and response fashion. The trumpet interrupts this section to signal the transition to the spirited finale. The ending has an intense rhythmic drive, which only briefly wanes with a melody from the Romanze before the final robust conclusion.

The Golden Spinning Wheel, Op. 109

Antonín Dvořák, a Czech composer, began displaying musical talent at an early age. He first began on violin and then continued with piano, organ, and viola. He is best known today for his symphonies, concertos, and string quartets, which are performed quite regularly. As a proud Czech composer, folk music and rhythms play an important role in his compositional style. His nationality inspired him to write four symphonic poems based on fairy tales by the Czech poet Karel Jaromír Erben. The music Dvořák composed in The Golden Spinning Wheel, the third out of his series of four tone poems, tells an auditory version of Erben’s story:

A youthful king is hunting on horseback when he comes across a small cottage. He stops to ask for a drink of water and immediately falls in love with Dornicka, the young girl who fetches him water and continues to spin at her wheel. The king later returns to the cottage to request Dornicka be brought to the castle for her hand in marriage. He is greeted by her stepmother who agrees to fulfill his wish of bringing Dornicka; however, she instead takes both Dornicka and her daughter— who looks much like Dornicka—into the woods where she disembodies Dornicka. She sends her own daughter to marry the king instead. The king marries the stepmother’s daughter and soon after heads off to war. While gone at war, an old sage discovers the remains of Dornicka’s body and plans to bring her back to life. He does this by exchanging the parts of a golden spinning wheel for Dornicka’s missing body parts. The king soon returns from war and is greeted by the golden spinning wheel playing a song which describes the events that have transpired. Having learned of Dornicka’s place in the woods, the king races off to find her. He finds her alive and well, takes her back to the castle, and the two are finally joined in a harmonious marriage.

Special thanks to the multi-talented UWSO violist and composer Irene Putnam, whose imaginative pencil drawings of characters in The Golden Spinning Wheel are projected during the performance.
JEFFREY FAIR has been the Principal Horn (The Charles Simonyi Chair) of the Seattle Symphony Orchestra since February 2013 and a member of the Orchestra since 2003. His playing has been described as “compelling,” “evocative” and “full of finesse and assertiveness.”

He also performs as Principal Horn of the Seattle Opera. Since 2004, he has appeared regularly at the Seattle Chamber Music Festival and recently presented world premieres by Gerard Schwarz and Lawrence Dillon. He is on the faculty at the University of Washington and is responsible for instruction of all horn students.

Mr. Fair has served as Principal Horn and faculty member of the Eastern Music Festival and as Principal Horn of the Arizona Music Festival. Additionally, Mr. Fair appears throughout the Northwest as soloist, chamber musician, clinician, and teacher.

Prior to moving to Seattle, he was Principal Horn of the San Antonio Symphony for three seasons, appearing as soloist on several occasions. Mr. Fair completed a Master of Music degree at the Juilliard School as a student of Jerome Ashby. A native of Oklahoma, he received a Bachelor of Music degree, summa cum laude, from the University of Oklahoma as a student of Eldon Matlick.

Austalian horn player JENNA BREEN began her musical education aged 9 on the flute, a year later taking up her now preferred instrument, the French horn. Throughout her school years she developed her love for music through participation in various youth and community ensembles, always wanting to pursue a career in this field. Following her completion of high school, Breen studied with Peter Luff at the Queensland Conservatorium of Music on an Academic Scholarship. During her course she also received the Kurt Blumenthal Music Scholarship and the Yvonne Haysom Women in Music Bursary. Breen moved to Melbourne in 2009 to study at the Australian National Academy of Music where she has since been living except for a brief stint in 2012 working as second horn with the West Australian Symphony Orchestra. After three years contracted as tutti horn to the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra, Breen won the permanent position in 2014. In the same year she was awarded a Winston Churchill Memorial Trust Fellowship to study with some of the best low horn players across the globe, visiting Berlin, Chicago, London, Los Angeles, New York and Philadelphia. Breen has also worked with the Queensland, Adelaide and New Zealand symphony orchestras, the Malaysian Philharmonic Orchestra and the Australian Chamber Orchestra.

Prior to becoming a member of the Seattle Symphony, JOHN TURMAN was awarded the position of principal horn of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra in the spring of 2015. During the 2013-2014 season, Turman performed with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra as acting third horn. Additionally, he has performed with the Austin Lyric Opera, Austin Symphony, Houston Grand Opera and the Houston Symphony. Turman received his degree in Horn Performance from Rice University in 2015 where he studied with William VerMeulen.

Praised by The New York Times for her fearless and seductive playing, Seattle native DANIELLE KUHLMANN returns home to join the Seattle Symphony after a three-year tenure with the San Diego Symphony. She completed her undergraduate degree with Jerome Ashby at The Juilliard School and pursued graduate studies at Rice University under William VerMeulen. An avid interpreter of new music, she was Principal Horn of the American Composers Orchestra, and performs with the International Contemporary Ensemble (ICE). In addition to classical performances, Kuhlmann is a founding member of the all-female pop Horn quartet Genghis Barbie. Devoted to philanthropic work, Kuhlmann has spent four summers in the Philippines volunteering for the group Cultures in Harmony, a New York-based NGO that promotes cultural diplomacy through music. The group works with both professional- and student-level musicians as well as indigenous tribal youth. In January of 2011, she volunteered in Kabul, Afghanistan, teaching and performing at the Afghanistan National Institute of Music.
